RUSSIA' AND THE WAR.

CONSUL-GENERAL'S VIEWS

M. D'Abreu says his views on the Allies are based on knowledge of his countrymen as much as on the Russian press. He says that the Russian people are as thorough as the state of affairs in troubled Russia.

The general feeling of the Russians is that the war is against war itself. It is not a war that they are fighting," he told the audience.

M. D'Abreu's assertion that the Allies can trust Russia, and the conviction with which he said that the Russian people are as thorough as the state of affairs in troubled Russia, are a man of wide consular experience. Although in manner he deals convincingly with the subject in a broad, appealing, and untechnical English. He is clearly interested in the development of commercial relations between Russia and the United States.

Constantinople was born in Australia as a Russian. His father had spent his childhood in Tiflis, in the Caucasus, where he later held a Government position as Judge of the International Tribunal, and later went to Russia to complete his university education. Having graduated from the University of Constantinople, he joined the Foreign Office, at which time he was appointed in Valparaiso, Chile, Roumania and Egypt before coming to Constantinople in 1907. He was in Crete during the war between Turkey in 1897-98, and met two of the men who have become famous during the past few years—M. Venizelos, the Greek patriot, and Kiver Pascha, the Turkish commander.

CONSTANTINOPLE

Questioned as to the Provisional Government's declaration of a no-annextion policy, Constantinople said:

M. d'Abaz said he saw nothing strange in the statement that Russia did not want Coe in Antislip. She had wanted it in the past but she had been overruled. "I am sure we could afford a hundred or even 500 years ago, younger holds good to-day," he said. "So long as Russian shipping can pass freely, and the straits are opened, that is all we wish. We will obtain it without having the other nations to thank for it, and moreover, to the benefit of keeping it."

That "peace without annexation" does not necessarily mean leaving enemy countries free, is explained by M. d'Abaz as follows: "Russia has pledged herself to renounce all her claims on the coast of the Black Sea, and to abstain from any action by Russia. It means taking away the provinces from Germany. An independent Armenia has also been promised, which will fection Turkey." M. d'Ankara does not think decision not to annex Constantinople was a mistake. The war must be fought in Germany in order to secure the peace. Germany must be defeated again in the future.

As to the situation in Russia, which at the distance is necessarily obscure, even to the Russian Consul. M. d'Ankara was asked if the revolution was all likely to develop on the basis of the program of the moderate party, which, he thinks, however, that the moderate party, will come out on top.
"Things may be quiet for a few months,
as actual fighting is concerned," he said.
But eventually all will be well, unless the extremists and anarchists get the upper hand.
Even if that happened, however, it would mean a counter-revolution, because the nation would not stand it. In the Russian nation the far-right and the left claim only 10 per cent of the population. The country may be illiterate, but he has sound common sense—it is not a socialist. The sentiment that raises him is not a socialist sentiment. He would like to put down the Paris commune and to help the moderate party in Russia

to keep the extremists temporarily too cheap to be dangerous.

MANIFESTO TO CITIZENS

M. d'Abaza has just received by mail from Vladivostok a copy of a Russian newspaper of March 17, containing the following manifesto:

Manifesto—Citizens, soldiers, and sailors

The greatest event in the history of the Russian people has occurred.

Above northern Russia rises the sun of freedom, truth, and justice. The Government has been overthrown.

The people has gone into oblivion.
But happy as we are, we must not forget for a single moment that we are opposed by a strongly external foe, whose sole object is to make us his slaves and bondsmen.
The great Russian nation will not allow this, and will give noble resistance to the enemy, and save our mother country and our rights to a happy life.
Citizens! Do not allow our enemy to imagine for a single moment that his inviolability will ever be realized.
Man all the ranks of our valiant army and navy, and for all of us serving Russia let there never be a single moment of faltering or hesitation.
This can only be achieved by us all re-maintaining tranquility, upholding order, and preserving the rights of the authorities until the new National Government passes new laws regulating the change.

Citizens, in the name of millions of our brethren, in the name of freedom, and the honour of our motherland, we must remain calm. Only calmness and legality will save Russia and help her victorious out of this terrible war.

Citizens, remain quiet.

Issued by the Municipality of Vladivostok.

TRADE POSSIBILITIES.

Speaking of trade possibilities between Australia and Russia, M. d'Almeida referred to information some months ago of a bureau of commerce, which was really a Russian-Australian

In a fortnight's time the representative appointed by this bureau, Dr. Kibatchook, will be leaving Australia for Petrograd, and before going will visit Sydney and Brisbane and explain the objects of the organisation. Preliminary work has already been done in Victoria, Tasmania, South Australia, and in New Zealand. One of the most important things declared M. d'Abaza "is for Australia to discover Russia in a commercial sense, and for Russia to discover Australia."

CLAIM FOR DAMAGES.

LONDON, May 22.—The action was continued in the King Bench Division to-day in which John Grubb is suing Mr. Handel Booth, M.P., for damages in depriving him of his business connection with the firm of Halsh and Gruben, of Oldham, of which plaintiff was chairman.

Mr. Addison, Minister for Munitions, gave evidence that he, as Under-Secretary, had sanctioned the appointment of a supervisor over the firm, because it was alleged to have disobeyed instructions and made overcharges. He did not speak to Booth on the subject before the supervisor was appointed.

sanctioned a reference to the Home Office of certain complaints regarding Grubben's view to the possible internment of Grub. Booth had nothing to do with them.

Dr. Addison declined to produce the confidential papers. He denied inducing Booth to secure Grubben's removal from the company.

Booth gave evidence denying Grubben's allegations.

AUSTRALIAN RED CROSS

LONDON, May 11

The Australian Red Cross report for Asiatic shows that the society handled 6579 law parcels and 3256 outward parcels. Arrangements have been made to pack parcels for prisoners at the society's own stores, involving a large saving in expenditure. In April 1924 entertainments were given for patients in English hospitals. A large parcel of newspapers was distributed. A quantity received from New South Wales inadequate; while none was received from Western Australia. The society's agents on Salisbury Plain are working smoothly and sickness is steadily decreasing.

Mrs. A. Cornish, of 126 Eireleigh-st. Redfern, has received an official communication stating that her brother, Private W. J. Grafton, has been awarded the mill medal. He was wounded on two occasions in New Heek in the first line.

Private T. Keane, of WOLLONGONG, from the 11th, was awarded the mill medal for gallantry in the first line early two years ago, and was wounded no less than five times, but awarded the military medal for bravery.
